Robert Van Arlen Ignites Corporate Social Responsibility with a Global Challenge

Robert Van Arlen is stepping up and stepping out to make his message available to community service and charitable organizations worldwide. Corporate social responsibility has taken center stage as world leaders promote service and support to service organizations. Van Arlen, the speaker that normally commands fees upwards of $15,000.00 is giving corporations the opportunity to sponsor him to speak on their behalf to their favorite cause with no honorarium. Known as one of the most engaging speakers ever, he educates and entertains audiences with rhythm and music, bringing the audience into the program with interactive, personalized music and activities. In today's challenging economy, many community service organizations are faced with a greater need to raise capital for expanded service needs, and they don't have the time or resources to engage their workforce and keep them motivated. Special events such as Robert's interactive programs are a spectacularly entertaining way for non-profits to galvanize supporters, reward their people and boost morale.

Van Arlen believes it is a corporate responsibility to do everything possible to support these organizations. He also knows that most successful organizations want to share their success by "paying it forward" into their communities where there is need. That's why he is challenging companies to support organizations they believe are vital to their community, the country and to the world by sharing their success.

It's as simple as this: Companies (including past clients) can email Van Arlen to request him to speak at their favorite charity's local, regional, national or global conferences. They are asked to explain in their request email why they support their gifted organization, more specifically outlining what that organization does for their community and why they are so deserving. The sponsoring organizations will only have to cover nominal expenses, such as travel and supplies.

Oh by the way, Robert has decided to have a public drawing that will include a free program for 1 of the first 5 corporations that take on the challenge.
